WHAT IS GOING ON IN THE CHIEF CITIES OF EUROPE

PRINCE EDWARD SHOWS GAMENESS
TAKING BEATING

LONDON, June 1.—The members of the Prince of Wales' household are much amused at the accounts which have been received from various sources of the doings of the Prince's eldest son, little Prince Edward, or "David," as he is called at home, at the Osborne College for Naval Cadets.

The other day a certain well-known woman who has lived all her life near Sandringham, the King's Norfolk home, and who, therefore, has known all the royal family since she was a girl, took her son to Osborne.

The little boy who, like Prince "David," was entering the college for the first time, had been laid up with the measles, and so the young prince had several weeks' start of him. The anxious mother naturally wished to see the dormitory where her son was to sleep.

As she entered the long, bare apartment, she witnessed a terrific struggle. A rather fat boy was pummeling another on the floor. The "under-boy" was purple in the face with rage, and making determined efforts to get up and "do" for the fat boy.

The struggle lasted a long time, the under-boy being severely punished, but refusing to shed a tear. To the amazement of the anxious mother, the "under boy" turned out to be Prince "David," the future king of England, who had been accused of "putting on frills."

The Prince of Wales, on hearing of the incident from the anxious mother, merely remarked: "It will do him good."

SMALLER GOODS
OF ENGLISH USE
MADE IN GERMANY

LONDON, June 1.—The thousands of skilled British workers who are going over to protect Germany will assist still further in ruining British trade. The intention of the manufacturers is to utilize the expert knowledge of these men for the construction of the most costly type of articles which will then be "dumped" in the markets of free trade Britain.

Already over 70 per cent of the smaller goods in England are made in Germany. A well-known hardware dealer, talking to an Express representative, put the percentage much higher—"90 per cent at the very least," he said.

Into whatever type of shop a customer goes, the probability is that the majority of the articles purchased are of German origin. A round of retail shops in a London street yesterday resulted in a striking object lesson in this direction.

Nearly all the glass fitted to London windows comes from Germany.

The bottle in which the invalid carries away his medicine probably came from the other side of the North Sea. So do the tin kettles and pans and other cheap tinware, brass wire bird cages, "French" wire nails, bead trimmings, brushes and brooms, clocks, china earthenware, electrical goods, fancy goods, and embroidery and needle work.

CONVICTS' SOCIETY FOR YOUNG BRIDE

LONDON, June 1.—Very few people who were present at the rather quiet wedding of Miss Beatrice Knollys, a niece of Lord Knollys, King Edward's life-long friend and secretary, to Sir Capel Wolseley, realized the pathetic opposition to the marriage which had been offered by the Knollys family.

There was no question about the bridegroom, who is a popular and charming man of much culture, but unhappily he is British consul at Archangel, that terrible northern post in Russia, where the Czar's unfortunate political offenders are compelled to live a life of absolute boredom through terrible winters.

They are the best class of political prisoners, it is true, and they are allowed much freedom, but theirs is the only society offered to Lady Wolseley after her life in England, and it was for this reason that the match was opposed.

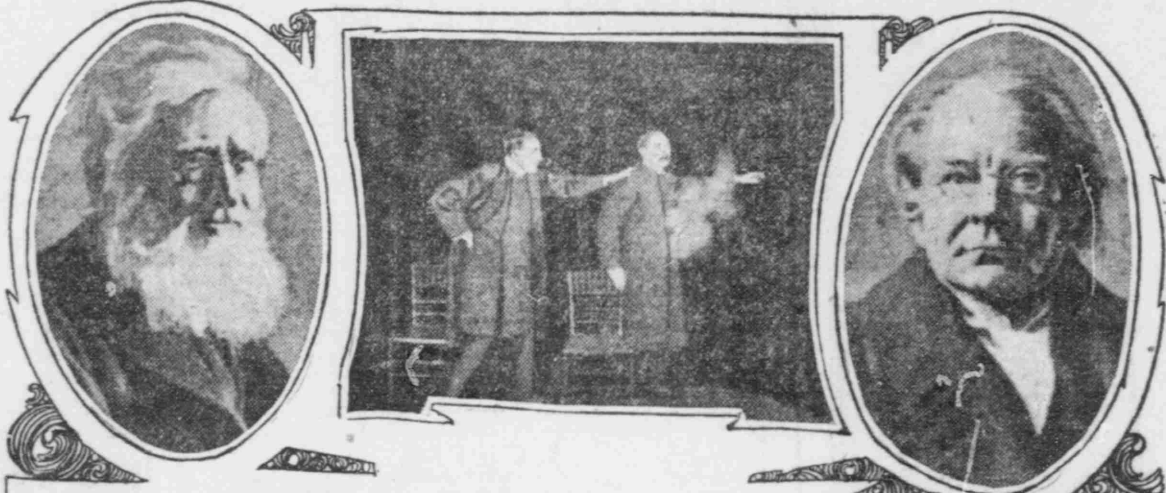

WHITEHEAD REID SNUBS
POET LAUREATE AUSTIN

LONDON, June 1.—Ambassador Whitehead Reid administered a painful snub to Alfred Austin, the poet laureate, at the "Dante tea" given at Dorchester House.

The English rhymist, discussing American literature with Mr. Reid, rather tactlessly said: "It is strange that America, which has produced so many millionaires, has so very few poets."

"I think," replied the ambassador, "that the statement might be equally applied to England. I do not think there has been a really great English poet since Tennyson."

Mr. Austin could forgive the American diplomat for ignoring Alceon Charles Swinburne and the others, but was sorely hurt by the implied slight on the genius of England's official poet.

Spooks in English Court;
Spiritualist Archdeacon
Sues Professional Wizard

These pictures represent Archdeacon Colley, the lowest figure, who sued the London magician, Maskelyne, for saying that he had no right to his dual title. Maskelyne duplicated, as shown in the three central pictures, the "mystery," by mechanical means, of a female spirit emerging from a man's side, which Colley claimed he had seen done by spirit aid, and for the duplication of which he offered £1,000 forfeit, which he refused to pay. In the upper left hand corner is Dr. Alfred Russell Wallace, eminent scientist, who supported Colley, and in the other corner is David Christie Murray, well-known author, who upheld Maskelyne. Colley sued for £1,000 and got £70.

EUGENIE SECURES
HISTORICAL RELICS

Were Personal Property of Napoleon III, Her Husband.

PARIS, June 2.—The Empress Eugenie has just won a suit in the Paris courts against the government, which will deprive the national museum of a large number of objects of historical interest and value now being shown in them.

As far back as 1873 the empress brought a lawsuit claiming the return of certain articles which had been the personal property of her husband, the late Emperor Napoleon III. These articles had been appropriated by the state, since the republic, and had been placed in palaces of the Elysee, Fontainebleau, Versailles, Compiègne, Rambouillet, and the Louvre Museum.

At that period the courts found that the august lady's claim was justified in theory, but nothing more was done in the matter. She has again brought the matter before the Paris courts, whose judgment is to the effect that as those objects were in reality a personal property of the Emperor Napoleon III, and as they are of minor interest from the artistic or historical point of view (this is to save appearances) they are to be handed over to the Empress Eugenie.

The articles include pictures, tapestries, porcelain, snuff boxes, etc., but the most interesting among them are a number of personal relics of Napoleon I.

MADE SISTER SWALLOW
MANY PINS AND NEEDLES

PARIS, June 1.—Forcing his sister to swallow needles is the queer charge brought against a man living at Tassin, in the department of the Rhone.

The sister, who is twenty-two years old, declares that he made her swallow needles which he stuck in pears and oranges, because he wanted to get rid of her in order to add her share of her fortune to his own.

When she was taken to the hospital, not fewer than seventy-two needles were extracted from the girl's body, and more were taken from her afterward. Although she has suffered fearful agony, her life is not in danger.

CHAMBRUN AIDS PLAN TO MAKE CHEAP LACE

PARIS, June 1.—A competition of the beautiful hand lace which is only obtainable in France and Belgium is about to be opened at the Musee Sociale in Paris, an interesting institution founded by the Count de Chambrun, husband of the sister of Nicholas Longworth.

The object of the competition is to encourage the making of practical lace at reasonable prices. The Society of the "Dentelle de France," which has many aristocratic supporters, has noticed that between the cheap commercial lace, which is used for so many purposes, and the costly article used for luxurious toilettes there is no medium, and it is the object of the present movement to supply this.

Some 300 specimens made by seventy-five schools of French lace have already been sent in to the Musee Sociale. The president of the movement is Mme. Emile Loubet, wife of the ex-president of the French republic.

Announcement of Removal

I respectfully beg to inform my patrons, friends, and public that I have removed my tailoring establishment from my recent location, 818 F St. N. W., to 925 F St. N. W. (next block, north side).

I cordially invite one and all to call and inspect my new establishment, which has been carefully fitted for strictly modern tailoring in all branches.

Thanking you for past patronage, I remain,
Very truly,
T. E. GILBERT,
Importer and Tailor.

NEW CHIEF SURGEON
SELECTED BY KAISER

BERLIN, June 1.—The Kaiser has given the highest medical post in Berlin, that of chief surgeon of the Royal Clinic, to Prof. August Bier, of Bonn University, who is regarded as a "coming man." Prof. Bier will succeed the late Prof. von Bergmann, and will also hold a professorship at the Berlin University.

Prof. Bier is the inventor of the valuable surgical processes—the artificial steaming of the circulation of the blood, as a cure for purulent abscesses, and the injection of anesthetics into the spinal marrow, which is used for rendering the lower part of the body unconscious.

PRETENDER WINS AGAINST SULTAN OF MOROCCO

TANGIER, Morocco, June 1.—Word has been received of the defeat with great loss of life of the Sultan's forces at Marchia by the pretender's soldiers. Muley Ben Bekir, the Sultan's uncle, and two khalas are reported killed. Three hundred men are said to have been captured.
